What does community participation in the health care system look like?

- Community participation also brings together precious local resources for health, both tangible & intangible.
- Community participation thus occurs when a community organizes itself and takes responsibility for managing its problems. Taking responsibility includes identifying problems, developing actions, putting them into place, and following through those actions.
- As community health workers we can assist, we can encouragewe can even inspire our local communities to visualize health as a fundamental right and how their participation is an important proactive step in improving individual health and community health.

According to WHO,

the most realistic method of attaining community participation is by the engagement of 'community health workers':

- The community health worker provides the first level of contact between individuals and health care system.
- They can be trained in a short time to perform specific tasks and carry out a vast range of activities.
- They come from and are often chosen by the community they live in.
- Training and re-training of these workers is the responsibility of the administration.
- When more complicated care or advice on complex problems is required, the community health workers should have access to technically trained staff.
